

TODAY TUESDAY

Judith Flores Carmona

Today, Tuesday...You said you would teach anyone, even a homeless person.
But you also said, it was up to you to grade.

...You critique my performance, say I cannot do math or science, but you only communicate with the male students.

...You tell me, "I warned you math is hard for all of your people."

...Nearly all of your remarks embarrass and humiliate my race and gender.

...I feel anger and frustration surging through my body and soul.

...I feel like spitting in your face and telling you how ignorant you are.

...You do not see the hurt you have caused me, so used to hurting those like me that it is part of your daily life.

...You cannot imagine that I might tell someone about your racist and sexist comments.

...I am a brown woman, but not a silenced woman.
