What could have been

For Officer Brian Encina, Citizen Sandra Bland and our system

If this anger at her
 and all she images,
 if fear for my ego-invested badge, this uniform, my being what I am,
 had just let her go with a ticket, respectfully given,
 case closed.
 If this death was by me
 and not another... having given in to despair letting go the fragile threads of hope for another sunrise, another day and said yes to life, yes to myself.
 If our system, this culture, immersing us in arrogance and despair could just stop it.

—Tom Keene August 14, 2015

when history repeats itself, -in honor of BLM we are here again, which means we never left.

 we tried to move on, but the chain only let us go so far.
 we did feel some relaxation,
 some approximation
 of what we imagined freedom to be.
 we did rest at times and bask in the sun.
 we are here again, which means we never left.
 i am telling myself the same bedtime stories.
 i am rubbing the same worries from my eyes
 and the wounds around my ankle have calloused.
 each day feels like the day before or the day after

and i am losing track of the years.
 what happens to a dream deferred, to a raisin in the sun?
 what is dried and withered hardens to stone and whether it bleeds tears or blood is unknown.
 what is dried and browned to seed germinates new life and sprouts new creeds.
 —Yon Hui Bell
